with his long putts. Two of them actually jumped the cup, two others rimmed it.

It is said the winner's game was more brilliant than the loser's. Now, I don't want to put my finger in my mouth, and hang my head, and try to look coy and modest, but where does the truth of that statement come in? There were a number of spectacular shots, it is true, notably two 225-yard driver shots over the ditch guarding the seventh green. But one of them followed an atrocious flub with a brassy, the other came after a short shot out of the rough. You can't win a championship game by playing safe. That ball just had to be on the seventh green on the next shot or the hole was lost, that's all there was to it. And if the winner took chances and got away with them, and McGurrin didn't take chances, it wasn't because the latter lacked nerve. It was because he kept out of trouble and the winner didn't.
